She's my mom

Kids express their feelings through art

By TIM SMITH

It's payback time this week in classrooms all over West Bloomfield, such as First Impressions Nursery and Day School, where children are making a point to do something special for the person who spends so much time every day doing neat things for them.

After all, Mom. Who else would make someone's favorite snack, take them to the toy store or just goof around with them?

Just ask 5-year-old Nicole Walter, a pre-kindergarten pupil at First Impressions.

"I like to play with her, play games," Nicole said. "And throw eggs at her . . . just pretend eggs, though."

But Nicole knows why she and her classmates have been hard at work this week — renting various art works (how about "You're My Cup of Tea" bags or heart pin grade 5?) to commemorate Mother's Day on Sunday, the Mom-special day.

Some of the other youngsters at First Impressions love Mom for many other reasons:

Four-year-old Christopher White, also a pre-kindergartener, likes his mother because she plays Mousetrap with him; kindergartener Amanda Mooiy, 6, said her mom takes me places . . . like Toys 'R' Us." 5-year-old Blake Mavitz, a pre-kindergartener, "drives me places, she takes me to the restaurant."

According to pre-kindergarten pupil Lauren Schwartz 5, her Mom is the best because she "makes me chicken nuggets and helps me make my bed."

OK, these aren't the most philosophical or compelling reasons ever cited about why there's a Mother's Day. But we're talking about 5-year-old kids here.

And that's an extremely important thing to remember, said Theresa Tousley, First Impressions pre-kindergarten teacher.

"Everybody has a mother, we all love our mothers and they're the favorite people," Tousley said. "But it's hard for them to understand about their mothers' personalities or get the concept about how their mothers love them.

"For 4-year-olds, up to this stage of their life, they've always been focused on me. Now they're learning their mothers and fathers are important. And we talk about that."

Bearing out the notion that older children have a better grasp about the importance of Mother's Day was 10-year-old Sophia Harrison, one of the older children attending My Place Just For Kids, a drop-in day care facility in West Bloomfield.

"She's just her," Sophia said. "And she tries to do a good job of being a parent. She's forgiving and you can trust her."

Sophia said Mother's Day is very important to celebrate because it shows that children "take the time to appreciate our mothers and all the hard work they've done."

One of the projects at First Impressions intends to show just how versatile and hard working moms everywhere are, said Joyce Shwedel, afternoon enrichment teacher for kindergarteners.

"They're making hats to show how many jobs moms have — nurse, cook, driver, housekeeper, playmate," said Shwedel, holding one of the paper plate hats. It featured dangling cut-outs made to match the different motherly tasks.

Those hats, as well as all the other specially made Mother's Day gifts, will be presented to the moms during a Friday morning breakfast at the Drake Road nursery school.

Cindy Aguirre, 5, plans to give her Mom one of the heart pins being made in kindergarten teacher Ronna Rives' class.

Given the way Cindy and her classmates feel, it's quite an appropriate gift.

"I love her," Cindy said with a smile and a shrug, describing why she thinks her Mom is special.

School kids say thanks in many ways

Elementary school pupils in the West Bloomfield and Walled Lake school districts this week are seeing coming up with 100 ways to say thanks to their moms.

Although not a small sampling of special Mother's Day thank-you efforts taking place:

At Doherty Elementary School in West Bloomfield, kindergarten and first-grade classes will host Mother's Day teas throughout this week; second-grade pupils will present heart-shaped buttons; third graders are making hand-made gifts and cards; fourth graders will give moms cookbooks they put together; fifth-grade pupils will distribute "We Love You Mom" certificates.

Not to be outdone on Mom's behalf are pupils at Decker Elementary School in the Walled Lake district.

Here are some of the things youngsters are doing at Decker, on a grade-by-grade basis:

Kindergarten: handprint pictures and flower bouquets; first grade: personalized stationery, "My Mom is Wonderful" flowerpot books, painted T-shirts; second grade: cards and handprint coupon books; third grade: flower cards complete with children's pictures; fourth grade: cards, coupons and "real" flowers; fifth grade: individual plants, cards and coupon books; sixth grade: flowers, cards and poetry.
