Glassy cat

An all-glass third door is available on the Mercury Bobcat Runabout for 1977. The entire door structure is tempered glass providing increased rear visibility. The 1977 Bobcat also has a firmer suspension, transmission improvements to increase fuel economy and an optional sports instrumentation handling group to enhance the subcompact's peppy character.

Pontiac unveils 2 light engines

Pontiac has joined the mileage race with two new engines

The 2.5 litre (151 cubic inch) L-4 and the 5-litre (301 cubic inch) V-8 are among the first domestic engines to be designed since an all-out effort began to take the automobile out of the air pollution problem

Both engines are a study in weight savings less weight means more miles per gallon The 452 pound V-8 is among the lightest of all domestically produced eights

Because the engines are able to produce more low-end torque, Pontiac claims the engines perform like much larger displacement engines at the speeds most people drive

To achieve the improved fuel economy, engineers designed a new crankshaft that saves more than 20 pounds A single-level intake manifold saves 19 pounds and provides a lower engine profile, dear to the designer's heart

The new engines are of the traditional overhead valve type rather than the overhead cam design.
