
Half a million

The Chevrolet Corvette, America's first authentic sports car, marked a historic milestone last week as Corvette No. 500,000 came off the assembly line. The half millionth came 23 years, eight months and 15 days from the day the first fiberglass bodied Corvette was built in Flint on June 9, 1953.

Don't touch odometer

By PATRICK KELLY

There are certain federal regulations that must be followed in selling a used car. Each person selling or transferring ownership of a motor vehicle is required to furnish a written, signed statement containing the odometer reading at the time of transfer.

The statement must also contain the date of transfer; the adress of the seller; the make, model and year of the vehicle; its body type, identification number and last license plate. In addition, if the seller knows that the odometer reading is different from the actual number of miles the vehicle has traveled, he or she must include a statement that the actual mileage is unknown.

Because some people have made improper use of this statement, particularly those who are guilty of odometer rollbacks, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) has moved to improve the regulation requiring certain information about the odometer. A section of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act, enacted in 1972, make it unlawful to tamper with an odometer for the purpose of concealing the actual mileage of a vehicle.

As an additional safeguard for buyers, who usually rely on the odometer as a guide to a vehicle's condition and value, the NHTSA issued odometer disclosure requairements that became effective March 1, 1973.

Now the NHTSA proposes to require sellers to indicate either that the odometer reading is true, the reading is not true and should not be relied upon, or the reading reflects the number of miles in excess of the designed-mechanical odometer limit.

The federal safety agency also wants sellers to certify that the odometer was not altered, set back, or disconnected while he or she was the owner of the vehicle. Another requirement would have both buyer and seller sign the disclosure statement, instead of only the seller.

Amendments to the Cost Savings Act provide for civil and criminal penalties for odometer violations. Any violation could result in a civil penalty of up to $1,000 or a criminal penalty of up to $50,000, one year imprisonment, or both. The Secretary of Transportation is authorize to conduct any inspections or investigations necessary to protect consumers from odometer rollback or tampering.

Another Wooden Indian

Bob Jeannotte Pontiac, 874 Ann Arbor, Plymouth, is the winner of the Pontiac Wooden Indian award for February. The award was presented to the small car sales leader in the Pontiac sales zone.

Gary Werfelmann was Jeannotte's top salesman for the award-winning month.

Jeannotte Pontiac has won the award six of the last eight months and was the 1976 yearly Wooden Indian award winner.

Demmer Ford honored

Jack Demmer Ford of Wayne has been honored by Ford Parts and Service Division for outstanding customer service during the lat four months of 1976. Paul Legowsky, the dealership service manager, won a Puerto Rican trip in recognition of his part in improving owner relations.
