Simple to change

Granted, you probably won't want to change the grille of your car every day, but making anything easy to change usually is a good idea. This Mercury Zephyr one-piece grille attaches with six screws. The ease of changing the grille should be appreciated by the repairman as well as do-it-yourself types. And it can't hurt insurance rates, which must include the high cost of repairing intricate grilles.

After winter, cars need spring cleaning

By PATRICK KELLY

Your car has just brought you through one of the worst winters in history. Now it deserves a little tender loving care. Of course, if your car didn't hold up, you may want to kick it . . . again.

But the first thing to do is to clean the winter's salt and mud deposits from the under-car areas where rust can start. These include under the fenders, the rocker panels and door bottoms.

While cleaning under the doors, one should be sure the drain openings haven't become clogged. If they are clogged, moisture will build up and cause rust to start on the inner panels.

Then give the car a good wax coating, being sure to cover all bright metal, and the under parts of the doors.

Next, check the air pressure in the tires, including the spare. Too many motorists neglect this simple process year-round, but especially during the cold, sloppy weather, so chances are the tires will need some air.

The pounding at the pot holes might have caused a misalignment of the front end, so concentrate on how the car tracks on the road and try to note whether it wobbles. Misalignment can cause rapid tire wear.

A pounding sensation, especially at high speeds, may be caused by another victim of the pot holes—the wheels. When you go in to have your front end aligned, you also can have the mechanic check to be sure the wheels are not bent.

Take a half hour to review the owner's manual, especially the section on periodic maintenance. The checklist will remind you about the intervals for oil change, transmission fluid, spark plugs and filters. The booklet also provides valuable information about knowing when to replace brake shoes, hoses, belts, ball joints and the other parts that will need replacement.

A periodic review of the owner's manual will go a long way in saving a motorist inconvenience and money. This is especially true at this time of year, when the car has been subjected to abnormal wear and tear because of the heavy snows and the heavy salting to combat those snows.
