
Automatic Audi

The Audi 4000 is now available with a package consisting of a five-cylinder engine, automatic transmission and power-assisted rack-and-pinion steering. Like all Audis, the 4000 has front-wheel drive. It delivered 28 mpg on the highway and 20 mpg around town during recent EPA tests.

Cars and comments

Motorists explain their need for cars

The importance of the automobile to our lifestyle was underscored by a group of irate car owners who wrote to an automobile club to complain about new taxes that will affect motorists.

The Automotive Information Council (AIC) compiled some of the comments.

• It is high time that our lawmakers woke up to the fact that not all car owners are wealthy. To many, a car is a necessity — not a luxury to be constantly singled out for more and more taxes.

• Higher taxes will only serve to escalate inflation, since a great majority of our essential goods and services are directly related to the price of motor transportation.

• I can't get to a drug store or the grocer without using my car, let alone get to work. Why must the brunt of this situation fall on me?

• Don't make my life more miserable than it is . . . . Without use of a car, I would not be able to leave my house for medical treatments, shopping, etc.

• Aren't these people aware of the fact that the economy of this country is dependent upon the automobile, and that the only thing they are accomplishing by the squeeze on motorists is total collapse?

• The guy who has to have a car to keep his job, in order to feed his wife and kids, is being forced out of his livelihood. . . . Get off our backs.

• The short-sighted politicians are determined to put the small business firm out of business. There is a limit to the costs I can absorb or pass on to my customers.

• We motorists have to live within our means. It's about time local, state and federal governments did the same.
