THE MOST UNUSUAL FEATURE ABOUT THE 1982 SAAB MAY BE ITS 1981 PRICE.

In a year when most car prices are being raised from Detroit to Tokyo, Saab is keeping its prices exactly the same.

Saab has always done things a little differently.

From the very first one that rolled off the assembly line over thirty years ago, with front-wheel drive.

To our 1982 line, with four-wheel disc brakes, mechanically controlled fuel-injection, energy-absorbing bumpers and roof, and dipped-beam headlights so you can see 50% further. As well as one of the first turbocharged engines to leave the track.

But the biggest difference has always been the way a Saab drives. This year, in fact, the editors of Road & Track magazine thought enough of that
