Taking Part in Mock Landing On West Coast

Marine Cpl. John Ross, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ross of 34091 Alta Loma, Farmington, landed with the 1st Marine Brigade on the beaches of Camp Pendelton in Southern California on April 1, marking the start of "Operation Big Land", a coordinated surface-air amphibious assault exercise.

The Hawaii-based Marines left Kaneohe in mid-March on amphibious ships returning from the Western Pacific. They spent a short time at Camp Pendleton for field exercises before the beginning of "Big Land".

Additional Marines from Pendleton and the 3rd Marines Air Wing at El Toro, Calif., joined about 5,000 Navy men and 25 ships in the exercise, designed to improve their professional skills in the conduct of amphibious warfare in the atomic age.

"Big Land" got underway with a bombardment of San Clemente Island by the fire support unit.

A mock invasion of Camp Pendleton was carried out to recapture an "Aggressor" offshore island for the purpose of establishing a base to hinder further enemy operations.

An assault helicopter aircraft carrier hell-lift fully equipped Marines to the shore employing the "Vertical Envelopment" version of assault landing.

On the completion of "Big Land", April 10, the 5,500 members of the Brigade will again take part in field exercises before returning to Hawaii during the last week of April.
