people of Europe really believe it.

2. Soviet Rearmament of East Germany is increasing. This is probably a psychological move made to worry the French and scare the West Germans away from the European army pact.

SEIZE BERLIN

3. There's been a heavy Russian build-up around Berlin. Simultaneously Communist civilians are reported planning to flock into West Berlin, stage riots, and give an excuse to Communist troops to enter the city. This time, it's reported, the Russians plan to seize both Berlin airports, thus making it impossible for us to repeat the airlift. In such event, Berlin would be starved out and have to capitulate. The alternative would be war.

4. European inflation is on the increase and is our second worst enemy. Some people claim it is even enemy number one. For, with prices high and wages low, inflation makes for Communism. Communist parliament members in France and Italy are endeavoring to create as much economic instability as possible in order to increase inflation.

5. Ratification of the United army pact is uncertain, and will be made more so by the above events. This is Moscow's real goal — namely, to discourage, frighten, disillusion the peoples of France and Germany to such extent that their parliaments refuse to ratify the historic pact.

WILL HISTORY REPEAT?

On the other hand, it remains a fact that a pact providing for a United European Army, putting French and German troops under one uniform, has been initialed. This could end 300 years of bloodshed. And this is more important than all the tricks Moscow is pulling out of the bag to block it.

Twenty-four years ago I was present in the Salon d' Horloge at the signing of the famed Kellogg-Briand pact. The August sun spread its slanting rays over the Seine, penetrated the deep-curtained windows of the Quai d'Orsay and danced among the great crystal candelabra of Louis XVI as Europe's statesmen scratched their names on the parchment outlawing war supposedly forever.

But in the background lurked forces of Fascism and nationalism which gradually undercut that treaty and edged the world toward war.

Today the same forces, this time under the name of communism, are equally intent on wrecking the pact being signed. The question is, will they succeed? The answer, in reality, is up to us.
