MICHIGAN MINE HAS DEEPEST TELEPHONE

Regular Service Available From Instrument at Bottom of Tamarack Copper Shaft

Attached to the wall, in a brick and concrete telephone booth, surrounded by untold copper mineral wealth, is the world's deepest telephone. Located more than a mile below the surface of the earth, at Calumet, in the far northern Michigan copper country, it operates just like any other telephone, and over it a person can call any one of the 32,600,000 telephones in the world which can be reached from any telephone in the Bell System.

This telephone is used to keep the lowest workings of one of the world's deepest and most famous mines in communication with the surface and with the management offices, for purposes of safety and operation. Although more than a mile below the earth's surface measuring vertically down the Tamarack mine shaft, it is approximately two miles from the surface measuring along the inclined Calumet No. 4 shaft. Both are part of the great mine workings of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company and have joined near the location of the telephone.

The world's deepest telephone is one of 256 Bell System telephones located in mining shafts, stamping mills, offices and other properties of the Calumet & Hecla Company. They are connected through a private branch switchboard system and used to co-ordinate the work of mining native copper-bearing rock and refining the metal for industry. The system is one of the "farthest north" large private branch exchanges in the United States. It is connected with the exchanges of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company at both Calumet and Lake Linden, Michigan.

The Calumet & Hecla mine, covering many square miles of territory both above and under ground, was developed following the mining of native copper-bearing rock and refining the metal for industry. The system is one of the "farthest north" large private branch exchanges in the United States. It is connected with the exchanges of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company at both Calumet and Lake Linden, Michigan.
