Mr. Saint, known as the lightning artist, will draw with both hands, singing and speaking as he executes humorous cartoons and beautiful color effects with spectacular lighting. GARDENERS TOLD HOW TO MAKE A COLD FRAME

Many victory gardeners prefer to grow their own seedlings as an economical means of providing plants to set in the garden. They are hampered in many cases, by lack of a cold frame, and find that attempts to grow the plants in the house are not so successful.

K. C. Barrons, of the department of horticulture, Michigan State college, says that a satisfactory cold frame that will serve the small gardener can be improvised from materials already on hand.

For the cover, a storm sash will work just as well as a regular hot-bed sash. The frame itself can be constructed of old boards. A few cracks will cause no trouble, if leaves, straw, or soil is banked along the side. A basement window, preferably on the south side of the house, is an ideal location, with the frame built around it. The heat will then enter from the basement. When the sun is shining on warm spring days, the front edge of the sash should be propped up for ventilation, otherwise too much heat will be created inside the frame. When it is warm enough, remove the sash so the small plants become accustomed to the full sunlight.

Seeds of hardy vegetables, such as cabbage, onion, head lettuce, and of hardy annual flowers, such as larkspur, batchelor buttons, and calendula, may be planted in boxes in early March and placed in such a frame, using the basement window as a door. When large enough to handle, they should be transplanted to provide space for stocky growth. These plants will be ready for the garden as soon as the soil can be prepared. Frost-tender plants, such as tomato, pepper, eggplant, zinnia, and marigold should be seeded in early April and set in the open when danger of frost is past.

Numerous Bacteria

There are many kinds of bacteria, some useful and others harmful. The most common types in milk are those that cause it to sour by converting the milk sugar—lactose—into lactic acid. This change is valuable as a natural method of temporarily preserving milk from putrefaction, and is important in the making of butter and cheese. Some other kinds of bacteria, as they develop, change the color or flavor of the milk, or make it slimy or ropy. Others, though, spread disease.

Road Maintenance

As more state highways become improved, maintenance costs increase. In 1925 the cost of maintaining state-administered highways was $119,303,000. In 1930 such costs were $191,683,000, and in 1940 were $215,093,000.
