'Old Grog'

A glass of grog is as familiar as the navy, and the way the drink got its name is an example of the sense of humor of sailors the world over. Back in 1745, the English admiral, Edward Vernon, decided the straight rum his men were drinking was a little too potent. He ordered that all shipboard liquor be diluted with water. The result was, to say the least, unpleasing to sailors. They christened the watery stuff "grog" in ridicule of the admiral, who was called "Old Grog" because of the grogan cloak he always wore—whether in port or at sea.

WASHINGTON DIGEST . . .

began devouring gardens of dahlias, morning glories, snapdragons and other flowers. The infuriated householders tried to shoo the horse away, but he kicked at them and went right on expropriating the bourgeois blooms. However, in the good old American tradition, a policeman appeared with a rope and lassoed the beast. He was removed to the police stables where he couldn't exercise a veto on this purely procedural process.

This subversive tendency in the animal world was revealed in another part of Philadelphia at about the same time. Returning from a week-end, a householder and his family who had started a counter revolutionary campaign against what they thought to be a harmless mouse, found a large-sized rat in the trap they had set. The rat with the trap attached as a minor incumbrance went right after the family which climbed tables and chairs. This time when the cop came he felt aggressive warfare justifiable and finished the rat with his reactionary night-stick.

CONGRESS' WORK IS NEVER DONE

Congressmen invariably come to work January 14 brisk of step, bright of eye, confident they'll have all the bills passed, all the necessary business disposed of by July 1 at the latest, so they can go home to their fences.

The oldtimers, of course, know they are just kidding themselves.

Business is never disposed of by July 1, though they work from sun to sun for, like woman's, congress' work is never done. Consequently, fishing trips, motor jaunts, and important electioneering have to be postponed while house and senate members labor in Washington heat to complete last minute legislation.

This year, it was the OPA gong that fevered congressional brows late in July. Debate was so furious, night sessions were so frequent that I wasn't surprised when I heard a man in the visitor's gallery of the capitol ask: "Why did they wait so long to get at the OPA bill? Seems to me they always have a lot of stuff left to do at the end of a session that they could have taken up earlier. Do they always let it go so long that these losing days cost like a rowdy jam session?"

I reported this remark to a man who knows Capitol Hill, as you and I know the short-cut home.

"There are no jams in congress," he answered as he inhaled another tablespoonful of the famous senate restaurant bean soup.

"Not even on OPA?" I modestly needled.

"No," he said, "but I'll admit they came to a near-jam when they had to work like the dickens to get the bill to the President before the OPA expired. But they did get it to him (he was talking about the first OPA bill)—and it was better than a lot of people had expected. That was no jam."

"What is a jam then?"

"What we used to have in the days of the lame-duck session," he came back promptly. "Then congress had to adjourn on March 4. A one-man filibuster could stymie legislation up to midnight of March 4, and it would never be passed. Then congress might act hastily, and perhaps unwisely, to meet its inexorable deadline."

A jam then, is when congress is forced to precipitate action, or to no action. That's a congressional opinion.

I'd still like to hear what Harry Truman would define as a congressional jam-up.

YOUR EYES are your best friends!

You expect a lot from your eyes . . . and they, in turn, expect something from you: proper care and attention. Give them that and they'll continue to work hard and faithfully for you every day of your life. Yes, your eyes are your best friends. Treat them so. Give them a chance to do their best for you!

HENRY J. KAISER and JOSEPH W. FRAZER ANNOUNCE THE NEW KAISER SPECIAL
THE KAISER SPECIAL is on the assembly lines at Willow Run NOW! It is a conventional rear-wheel-drive automobile, the result of months of advanced engineering, modern production planning and exhaustive tests.
This new 1947 motor car has everything you expect in styling, comfort, roominess, roadability and performance. Best of all, this car will soon be in the showrooms of our more than 4,000 dealers.
The KAISER SPECIAL precedes the front-wheel-drive KAISER, which will go into production later.
