What other state in the Mid-west can boast of 55 state parks? What other state has created the recreational area plan for a metropolitan area on such a vast scale as Michigan? And don't forget our 62 roadside parks and 300 roadside picnic tables, provided and maintained by the state highway department!"

It is Furlong's belief that Michigan citizens, particularly those living in the tourist regions, cannot afford to "rest on their oars". Forty-five of the 48 states now compete to attract tourists. Eight states joined the ranks in the past two years.

The state legislature this year turned thumbs down on a bill sponsored by the conservation department, to grant blank-check authority to build and operate hotels and cabins on any state land. Strangely enough, most members of the conservation commission privately frowned on this latitude. So did the state legislature!

The bewhiskered "Old Traveler" now promoting Michigan attractions for ten years, started something when he prodded newspaper editors at Topinabee. An intelligent and prolific writer, he may have done it deliberately. The result has been a re-appraisal of Michigan's tourist resources and perhaps a reawakening to the need for every citizen to be a friendly host this summer to millions of visitors.
