FINDS LAD'S COINS HIDDEN IN BASE OF PHONE

Telephone instruments sometimes are put to uses far afield from that for which they are intended. Frank E. Peeso, telephone repairman at Palmer, Mass., removed a telephone from a customer's premises recently, and some time later received a message that there was money in the telephone. He examined the transmitter and the bell box, but could find no money, and so took it back to the subscriber. There he was greeted by an anxious little boy. The youngster took the telephone from Mr. Peeso, got a screwdriver, and removed the base of the instrument. Inside was a handkerchief, neatly rolled, containing ninety-eight cents.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER; BETTER PHONE WHEN LATE

In an article on manners in a recent issue of the Washington Times, it was stated that only a doctor or other professional man whose time is not his own has any excuse for lateness. "And even he," the article continues, "owes it to everyone who is unavoidably detained to always telephone, or have someone telephone, to his hostess." In other words, it is never too late—to telephone.
