Against Convict Labor.

Highway Commissioner T. A. Ely does not approve of having the convicts work upon the state roads, believing that it would be a dangerous and costly method of getting the roads taken care of satisfactorily.

However, Mr. Ely favors taking the hundreds of tramps and bums in the workhouses few of whom are dangerous characters, and put them at work on the roads while keeping the dangerous prisoners behind prision walls and let them break the stone for these roads. In other words he favors having the petty criminals do the road work and the dangerous men the breaking of the stone where there would be no chance of them running amuck.

The Delineator For March

Two warm u head the list in The Delineator for March with two very remarkable articles. Miss Grace G. Strachan, president of the Interborough Association of Women School Teachers, city of New York who speaks or 15,000 teachers in New York City alone, tells of their fight for equal pay with the men of similar rank. Mrs. Wilson Woodrow says some things in "The American Husband" that will stir up much comment.

Kansas City's remarkable method of dealing with its prisoners throu h a board of pardon and paroles is explained by Charles Dillon under the title "A New Way to Save Men."

William H. Allen, director of the Bureau of Municipal Research, discusses from a scientific viewpoint "The Institutional Church" in which he discusses the social unrest in the church.

An article of particular appeal to girls is, "What a Woman's College Means to a Girl," by Madeline Z. Doty.

The fiction is pleasing, Virginia Frazer Boyle, Will N. Harben, Elizabeth Jordan and Thomas L. Masson contribute the leading stories. In addition Grace MacGowan Cooke's serial is continued.

The fashions are outlined for Spring in colors and with authority. Mrs. Simcox, in her letter, tells of the Spring coats and the trotteur frocks. There is a sence of completeness about The Delineator for March that is very satisfying.

A CLEVER MOTHER'S METHOD

Seems to Have Found Ideal Way of Correcting Mistakes and Retaining Child's Confidence.

My children always meet me with a full account of their doings on my return from a day of shopping or visiting, says a mother, writing for the Boston Herald. They had usually had a glorious time among legitimate amusements, working in one or more "stunts" which I would not wish again enjoyed. I made a habit of forbidding at once a recurrence of the objectionable pastime.

One day I overheard a child say: "I shan't tell mother things any more. She says every time we mustn't do it again, and if she did not know we could keep right on." Nowhere is knowledge power more truly than between parents and children, so I set about finding a way to correct my mistakes and keep the children's confidences.

Now, when they come prancing to meet me with a glowing account of hide and go seek out and in the closet where hang my "best clothes," I force a cheerful smile and a day or two later incidentally remark that, for various reasons, I don't wish that closet door opened. The situation requires diplomacy and it is not always easy to wait until a more convenient season for prohibition, but I am sure it pays. A day or two ago I found such a child had attempted candy-making in my absence.

The results were trying, but I did not find fault at the time. Later in the week I explained the cost of materials wasted if one cooked carelessly, and am certain it will not happen again. Justice, patience, kindness and absolute sincerity in a mother will do much toward curing a child of untruthfulness.

FIRST GLEAM OF SUNSHINE

Customs Official Was Much Mistaken in Imagining That Son-in-Law Felt Bad.

A San Francisco mother-in-law went to the orient and, coming back, was caught trying to smuggle in a lot of choice silks.

She had to pay duty and a fine. Then there was talk of a criminal action to follow.

Her son-in-law called on the customs officials. "Is it possible," he asked in a severe tone, "that after my mother-in-law has paid the duty on the stuff and her fine that you contemplate criminal action?"

"We are considering it," the customs official replied gravely.

"And if my mother-in-law were to be convicted, as she probably would be, she would have to go to jail?"

"I think so."

"Do you mean to tell me you intend to do this thing to a woman—a lady who has already expiated her fault and recompensed the government?"

"I do; but look here, old chap, don't take this too hard. I've got to do my duty, you know. Don't feel so bad about it."

"Bad?" shouted the son-in-law. "Why, my dear sir, this is the first gleam of sunshine that has entered my home in 20 years."—Saturday Evening Post.

Snakes in Austria.

Snakes are common enough in many Oriental countries; few persons are perhaps aware that they are very numerous in Austria, and that the government offers a reward for every snake killed. In 1908 no less than 273,000 snakes were destroyed, of which all but 4,000 belonged to venomous species. To aid the rural inhabitants in their warfare, the government authorities have supplied a simple appliance whereby, in the case of a bite, the possibility of a fatal result is reduced to the minimum. This instrument comprises a small knife wherewith the wound of a bite is immediately enlarged, and in the cut thus formed a concentrated solution of permanganate of potassium is injected. That such a precaution is valuable is borne out by the fact that out of the 140 cases of snake bites reported in 1908 only six proved fatal.

Useful and Happy.

Try to be useful just where you are. Many of us are fond of imagining how much we should do if our circumstances were other than they are. But that is waste of time. The thing to do is to do as much as you can for others here and now, and so make the most of your opportunities.

Don't be so busy preparing for some vague future time when you will be happy that you have no time to be happy to-day. The future will soon be the present, and the chances are that, when it does come, we shall still be so busy planning that we shall miss our chance of happiness altogether.

Languages of the World.

Statisticians who have delved into the subject of languages tell us that there are approximately 2,750 now in use throughout the world. To give absolutely the number of tongues would be manifestly impossible, for the reason that there are still unexplored parts of the world where tribes are known to exist.

Until ethnological surveys are made of every nook and cranny of this old world it will be impossible to classify all of the languages employed.

Fairy Literature.

"Father," said Little Rollo, "what is a prospectus?"

"The kind I am mostly acquainted with, my son, is the sort of fairy tale adapted to the tastes of adults instead of children."
