

Integrated styling

Chevrolet's 1980 Corvett has integrated its front air dam and rear spoiler into bumper covers. A 250-pound weight loss puts the car in the EPA's 3,625-pound classification. Significant reductions in front-end weight were achieved by use of a new fiberglass face bar and two fiberglass corner braces. An energy-saving torque converter clutch assembly is used with automatic transmissions.

Toll-free phone number encourages ride sharing

Sharing a ride from coast to coast and from points in between has become as simple as dialing a toll-free telephone number.

And pooling is a great way to conserve the nation's fuel, says the Automotive Information Council (AIC).

With that phone call, a person who wants a ride or a rider tells the operator the point of origin and destination and desired dates, and in a few seconds, the computer provides the names and phone numbers of those planning the same trip, or portions thereof.

THE CHARGE FOR membership in this service, operated by the National Car Pool Association, is $25 for six months, $450 for a year or $125 for a lifetime wanderer. Non-members can use the service for a one-time fee of $15.

Each passenger and the driver agree to share expenses.

The association set up 100,000 referrals last year, and it brags that it never has had a crime. It also says its service has saved about 1.5 million gallons of gasoline since it was started seven years ago.

THE APPLICATION form asks such questions as tobacco use, lifestyle leanings and other questions — for which answers are optional — in an attempt to match up those who might be most compatible on a long trip.

It also suggests that the parties who may share the ride get together before the trip to discuss groundrules and to share proper identification.

Whereas the share-a-ride concept first appealed to servicemen, students and the retired, the spectrum of interested persons has broadened to include everyone, says Ray Orsini of National Car Pool.

The organization also has set up a pooling effort for sharing rides on private airplanes and even yachts.

Membership forms can be obtained by calling 800-547-0933 or writing to Box 40303, Portland, Ore. 97240.
