The Ford Escort is available in two body styles — a three-door hatchback (foreground) and a four-door liftgate. When equipped with the manual transaxle and 1.6-liter engine, the Escort has EPA mileage ratings of 30 mpg city and 44 mpg highway.

Check your car's battery before heavy winter use

Your automobile battery should be checked on a regular basis.

It's easy to rmeember to do this if you check both engine oil level and the battery when you fill your car's gasoline tank.

The level of electrolyte should be checked and filled as necessary (unless the battery is a sealed "maintenance free" type).

Check the battery more often during the summer or when you're using your car harder or more often than normal.

For an easy visual inspection, do the following:

Water level: Normal operation causes the electrolyte level — commonly called the water level — to drop. The level should be at the bottom of the circular or triangular lip on the bottom of the filler hole. If the level falls below this, it may uncover portions of the battery's plates and reduce its efficiency and power.

Battery cables: Inspect your battery cables and posts for a gray or black deposit. This deposit can mean real trouble since it can insulate the cable end from the terminal.

Battery case: Check the battery case and top for cracks. Raised portions may signal leaks or corrosion at work beneath the surface.

Battery box: Check the battery box for corrosion and damage. Also check the battery's hold-down system for tightness and corrosion damage.

Perform simple maintenance yourself.

Keeping the battery case clean will reduce corrosion throughout the system. Washing with plain water can get rid of most of the corrosion and acid residue on the outside of the case.

If the battery's top is covered with corrosion and residue, cover the vent holes in the battery caps and wash the entire top of the battery with a solution of baking soda and water. Make sure none of the solution enters the battery.

Brush the battery with a stiff bristle brush and rinse with clean water. Wipe off standing water that might make a connection between the two terminals of the battery. Then remove the covers from the battery vent caps.
