The Peugeot 504 Sedan

At 24 miles per gallon, there is no way to take Peugeot, but seriously.

The beauty of the automobile (designed by engineers) may be subtle, but there is nothing subtle about the economy of operation. In a September 1973 test by Popular Science Magazine, the Peugeot 504 Sedan got 24 miles per gallon at a constant speed of 45 miles per hour. The kind of fact that can ease the frustration of waiting in line at service stations.

And this is the car that Road Test Magazine called "a paragon of durability". An outlook that matches what people need in an automobile today. Economy. A stunning practicality. And more than a few of the amenities. Peugeot. Consider the advantages. Popular Science Magazine did.
