

Millage fate decided

There's "the needs" of the millage request, but reluctantly moved to endorse the proposal.

But Bloomfield Hills has officially voted to stay neutral, largely because of board "concern with the size of the millage proposed," said Supt. Fred Thorton.

And Birmingham did the same. Supt. Roger Garvelink said the district expects to receive back only 60 percent of the $2.4 million it predicts its property owners will spend on the new tax.

Some other districts appear to be bringing waffling to a high art on this issue. The Troy school board, faced last June 8 tax increase request, amended the resolution to express its belief that

OTHER DISTRICTS are supporting the tax increase request, and doing it with gusto.

"Every year, the money the (intermediate district) is able to pay us for our non-center program gets less and less and less," said Lewis Schulman, superintendent of Farmington Public Schools.

"We think this is a very important issue," Schulman called special education a "really appropriate and humane program."

Most special education students take special classes only part-time.

Murder suspect heads for trial

John Creith was bound over for trial on Thursday after a pretrial examination on the charge of open murder in the death of David Yacobelli, 23, of Farmington.

Several witnesses at the pretrial testified that they had heard Creith, 18, of Waterford Township threaten Yacobelli's life on various occasions over an alleged $400 debt.

Creith is being held without bond in the Oakland County jail pending a June 11 arraignment before Oakland Circuit Judge Farrell Roberts.

Yacobelli died on May 6 several hours after being beaten in his Chatham Hills apartment, 36611 Grand River.

Yacobelli's roommate, Richard Matsch, was the first of 20 witnesses to testify in the lengthy pretrial examination before Judge Margaret G. Schaefer in Farmington 47th District Court.

Matsch testified that he left Yacobelli alone at their apartment at 10 p.m. on May 5 and returned at 4 a.m. May 6 to find him crouching in pain after an apparent beating.

"HIS HEAD was bent over on his shoulder, and his stomach was noticeably bloated as if he were pregnant," Matsch testified.

"He said he caught John under the hood of his car."

Yacobelli, who had undergone two kidney transplants and spent 12 hours a week on dialysis at a Livonia clinic, also suffered from a bleeding ulcer.

A Wayne County medical examiner's report showed that he died of abdominal injuries suffered as a result of an attack.

Creith's defense argued that the victim owed money to several other persons, who could have attacked him.

keep it up," she added regarding the drive.

The committee plans, among other things, to zero in on heavily attended shopping centers and to go door-to-door.

Recall supporters are optimistic that they will achieve their signature goal.

"The easy signatures we have," Bob Tomczyk said. "Now we're going to have to get the more difficult ones."
