So perfectly balanced are the huge propellers of the Cunard White Star supt-liner, Queen Mary, that even a touch of the finger on the giant blades is enough to set them in motion. Each of the four propellers weighs thirty-five (35) tons, being the largest manganese bronze units ever cast.

They Still Roll and Pitch

Although steamships have grown, so to speak, larger and larger, have not yet attained a size large enough to overcome the power of the ocean to make them roll and pitch.
