OCC Will Sign Faculty Agreement

After one of the longest negotiating sessions in teacher contract history, Oakland Community College's Faculty Association (OCCFA) and administrators reached tentative agreement on a new 1970-71 contract this week.

Administration spokesmen said the one-year agreement came after seven months of talks — "long in terms of total time, and long in terms of individual sessions that sometimes lasted as late as 5 a.m.," they said.

Rod Chase, chief faculty negotiator, told Observer Newspapers Monday that he thought teachers were "very happy" about the agreement. He said all provisions will be retroactive to July 1. (Teachers have been working under terms of the 1969-70 master agreement.)

Faculty members and administrators must now ratify the tentative contract agreement. Chase said OCCFA members are scheduled to meet Thursday for a ratification vote. Spokesmen for the administration said the Board of Trustees also has tentative plans to meet that day, "probably to ratify the contract."

BOTH SIDES were reluctant to discuss specific provisions of the new proposed contract, although Chase did say wages were "not a major hangup" in prolonging negotiations.

He said teachers will receive a pay hike of $150, from $9,300 in 1969 to $9,450 in 1970-71.

Student loads (the number of students per classroom) and departmental rights (the right to interview prospective teachers) along with administrative personnel were some of the chief stumbling blocks to settlement of the contract, according to Chase.

Administrative spokesmen added that "faculty control over innovative program" also produced some friction between the two sides.

"THE CONTRACT won't become official until both faculty and administrators ratify it," they said, declining to give out any more details about the settlement.

Asked if any mention had been made by either side concerning two or three-year contracts for the future, Chase replied, "In this day and age it's hard to talk about extended contracts when no one knows what the economy will be like in a year or even six months."
