As Farmington High School seniors said goodbye during the commencement on June 8, they had many memories to run through their minds.

Homecoming, dances, blood drives and charity work... These are the things graduates look back on fondly for years to come.

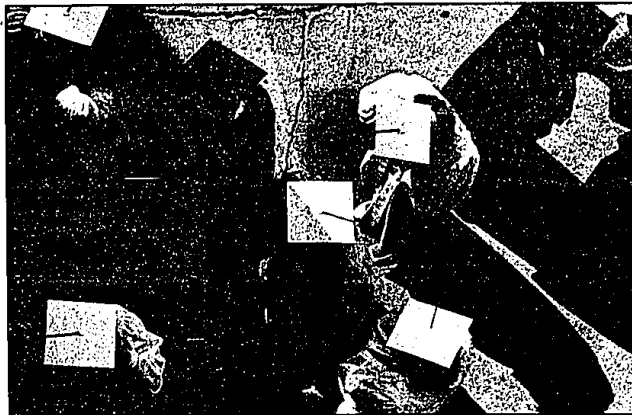

This class will remember winning the league quiz bowl. They will remember being part of a prom for senior citizens. And they will remember their studies.

According to principal James Myers, the graduating class of 1993 stands out academically. They won many scholarships and about 85 percent will go on to higher education.

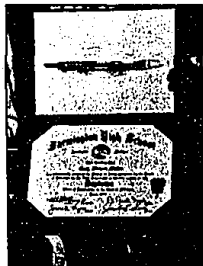

"I'm going to miss them," said Myers. "They are good leaders and a fun group of people to work with."

Class president Kevin Yoder spoke at the commencement. He told his fellow students to remember all the good times they shared together.

Holding the ceremony at Crisler Arena in Ann Arbor for the first time gave the seniors one last memory for the road.

County recyclers get grant

The Resource Recovery and Recycling Authority of Southwest Oakland County has been awarded a $500,000 grant to enhance their proposed Material Recovery Facility (MRF).

RRRASOC is a regional authority which aids in recycling issues of eight cities, including Farmington and Farmington Hills.

According to general manager of RRRASOC, Lenora Jadun, money from the grant will be used to buy equipment to assist in sorting the solid waste collected from all eight cities. The equipment will specifically handle glass, plastic, aluminum and other types of containers. More than $7 million is being used to construct the MRF in Southfield.

The purpose of RRRASOC is "to provide economical solutions for solid waste recycling." And the money provided by the Solid Waste Alternatives Program of the Department of Natural Resources will help increase the recycling capability of RRRASOC.

City managers from each member community serve on a board which creates policy for RRRASOC. Jadun said this is important because it gives administrators from each city a chance to exchange ideas.

"Even though we are a regional authority," said Jadun, "every city has their own twist on the collection."

The equipment will begin to be used in June 1994.
