PLAN TELEPHONE CABLE SPANNING THE ATLANTIC

Use of New Type, Discovered by Bell Scientists, Solves Baffling Problem

Another dream of telephone engineers has been made possible of achievement, namely that of telephoning across the Atlantic by deep-sea cable. Until recently, no one has known how to make a submarine cable that could carry speech over so long a distance and which could be laid in the great depth of the ocean. The longest deep-sea telephone cables which have yet been laid are the Key West-Havana cables, which are only a little more than one hundred miles in length.

Telephoning great distances over land cablesis made possible by the use of telephone repeaters, or amplifiers, placed at intervals of about fifty miles along the cable, serve to renew the strength of telephone currents. Obviously, it is out of the question to place sufficient vacuum tube amplifiers in a deep-sea ocean table.

Up to a few years ago, telephoning across the Atlantic by cable was practically impossible with a structure of cable which could be laid and repaired in deep waters, but through the development of new materials in the Bell Telephone Laboratories, telephone engineers now have the means to accomplish this long desired end. One of the important steps toward this achievement was the discovery, a few years ago, in the laboratories, of a permalloy, an alloy of nickel-steel, possessing properties, which has been used with much success for loading coils on land telephone lines and which has been used in the latest telegraph cables, as a wrapping of wire or tape around the conductor, serving a purpose similar to that of the loading coils used on land lines. In the meantime, the Bell Telephone engineers have been actively engaged in searching out new alloys and in developing means for using them. Their latest accomplishment is the design of a cable suitable for transatlantic telephony, and which not only will permit of telephoning across the Atlantic, but when not in use for such conversations, can serve for telegraph operation.

The success announcement can be made by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company before the cable has been manufactured, laid and tested, is particularly interesting, but the experiments that have been made have proved conclusively that such a cable is feasible. Similarly, some fourteen years ago, before the first transcontinental telephone line had been completed in 1915, telephone engineers knew in advance that their efforts would be successful and were able to make such an announcement although an actual conversation across the continent had not at that time taken place.

FRENCH WRITER LAUDS AMERICAN TELEPHONES

Andre Maurois, the French writer who recently made a visit to America, returned to Paris full of praise for what he saw and heard in this country. He declares that he found in America a real hospitality and a genuine interest in culture, as well as a profound knowledge of French literature.

The eminent Frenchman, author of "Ariel" and "Disraeli," also found much to praise in American industrial life. He was particularly impressed with the American telephone system, regarding which he says:

"A bad feature of American life is that the telephone works—and that they always get you."

Long-Distance Phone Rates Again Reduced

Another reduction of interstate long distance telephone rates by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company has been announced by Mr. Roy E. Crowe, manager here for the Michigan Bell Telephone Company. The reduction will become effective February 1 and will mean an annual saving of $5,000,000 to the telephone users in the Bell System, he stated.

This reduction, which is the third announced during the past two years and four months, will apply to interstate calls made between 4:30 and 7 p. m. and for distances between 130 and approximately 1,500 miles. Evening and night period rates will remain unchanged.

The new interstate rates will represent a reduction of from five to 25 cents each on day station-to-station calls, or calls in which the calling party does not express a desire to talk with some person in particular. Equivalent reductions will be made in the rates on person-to-person calls, or calls in which the calling party specifies that he wishes to talk with some certain person.

The speeding of long distance calls at lower cost, and the saving is being passed along to the telephone user, it is stated. Connections on more than 90 per cent of long distance calls of the country now are completed while the calling subscriber remains on the line, which is made possible by improvements in equipment and methods and the increased facilities. During 1928 approximately 1,500 miles of long distance telephone cable was constructed by the Bell System, which set a new record for a single year.

Mr. Crowe states that the reduction is in keeping with the Bell System policy, announced by President Walter S. Gifford of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, of furnishing the "best possible service at the lowest cost consistant with financial safety." The last previous reduction in rates on interstate long distance calls became effective December 1, 1927, and resulted in an annual saving to telephone users of approximately $1,500,000. A reduction effective October 1, 1926, represented an annual saving of $3,000,000.
