PICTURE TALK

ATTENTION "IN" ... YAWNS "OUT"

If you are like most people who enjoy taking pictures, you get a lot of pleasure out of showing your favorite slides to friends. And you enjoy seeing slides your friends have made.

But nothing spoils these impromptu slide showings more than projection troubles. So take a tip from those who make a profession of showing slides: use a projector that never gets in the way of the program, one that keeps attention at a high level ... the KODAK CAROUSEL Projector.

Here's a projector that anyone in your family can operate. It's Jam-proof ... never gets in the way of the show. The pictures are sharp and bright. The remote control lets the operator sit with his audience if he wants to.

The round slide tray holds 80 slides and feeds them by gravity. If 20 slides aren't enough, it takes only a second or two to drop in another trayload. You can rearrange the slides instantly, during the showing, if you wish.

Kodak makes three models of this projector so you can choose the very simplest of controls (push-button advance) or such refinements as remote control of the slide changing, remote control of fine focus, a dissolve unit or a device that lets you coordinate your slides with a taped recording. But, why not come in and see for yourself.
