

Community College Speeds 'Tutorial'

A significant step forward in the implementation of the "tutorial" approach to instruction is being taken by Oakland Community College this fall as the contractual agreement reached by the College and Litton Systems, Inc. George Mosher, OCC Board chairman, announced.

Litton personnel will assist in the analysis and design of the complete educational system, planning and implementing the curriculum, development of instructional materials, and staff orientation and training.

Oakland Community College has charted for itself a pioneering role in educational systems. Alfred Strogoff, Litton Vice-President, said, "Litton accepts this challenge and desires to participate by making a substantial investment in order to insure the success of this most significant educational model of higher learning."

"This advanced instructional system, including the tutorial technique, which is designed to serve the varying needs of individual students by means of supervised, self-instruction, will make Oakland Community College a model not only for other community colleges but for schools of all levels," Strogoff declared.

A key part of the program will consist of 60 self-instructional tutorial units developed by Litton. These programmed instruction units will be used in 10 different subject areas such as business accounting, electronics, college chemistry and physical science.

Development and implementation of the tutorial concept in the OCC academic and technical training programs will be carried out by the Educational Systems Division of Litton Industries in cooperation with the OCC staff.

Each student at the College will be provided with the necessary instructional materials and equipment for use in a specially designed study center. The range of instructional aids includes audio tapes, visual displays, books, periodicals, setup for experiments and programmed materials.

"Courses of instruction will minimize group teaching methods," Dr. John E. Turrell, OCC President, said. "Instead, students will use a carefully designed system which stresses supervised self-directed instruction. The system is controlled and paced by each student according to his ability to perform successfully. Responsibility for the achievement rests primarily with the learner."

Litton was selected by the College, according to Mosher, because of the organization's extensive experience in the application of advanced concepts and technologies in the fields of education and training. Litton operates Job Corps Training Centers where its responsibilities include education and vocational training. The company is also a leader in the design of closed-circuit instructional TV systems.

Oakland Community College will accept its first students, an anticipated 3,000, on Sept. 7 at its Highland Lakes and Auburn Hills campuses.
