State Police Use New Device To Check Speeders

The Michigan State Police is now being used in the department's first district with enforcement with the use of a new mechanical speed measuring device known as "Vas-car." Col. Frederick E. Davis announced.

Subsequently the department plans to have about 20 of the Vas-car units on a selective enforcement basis throughout the state, Davis said. Troopers are especially trained to use the device.

The device enables officers to accurately measure the speed of vehicles in front of or behind them, those approaching from the opposite direction, and those crossing their paths. It permits speed checking day and night and generally in any kind of weather. It can be used whether the patrol car is moving or parked.

The self-contained device, about the size of a cigar box, is mounted in the patrol car and linked to the speedometer cable.

Tests have shown it can be so accurately calibrated that its margin of error in the 30 to 100 mile an hour range is no more than a mile and a half per hour. The principle of operation is based on the formula that distance divided by time equals speed.

It clocks the speed of vehicles by measuring the distance between two fixed markers or reference points along or on a highway and the time taken by the vehicles to traverse this selected distance. Markers may be bridges, signs, guard rails, utility poles, even cracks or expansion joints in pavement, almost any stationary object.

Prosecutors and court officials in the area where first use of the device will be made, have been briefed in operation.

The State Police is one of the first departments in the nation to use this speed measuring device. One of its advantages is that the patrol car does not have to speed up to match the speed of a car ahead in order to check on how fast it is going.

2 From Area On Ferris Honor Roll
Two students from this area were among the 271 honored for academic excellence by being named to the Dean's Honor List at Ferris State College for the summer quarter.

Dr. Robert L. Huxol, vice president for instruction, said that to be accorded the honor each student had to maintain at least a "B" average while carrying a full academic load.
Steven J. Bullington, 14477 Shadywood, Plymouth, and Norbert C. Laskowski, 23308 Tuck, Farmington, both met the requirement, Dr. Huxol announced.
