

'The War' Bears Little Similarity To 'My World'

By BETTY MASSON

For those of us who enjoyed the television series "My World and Welcome to It," the movie "The War Between Men and Women" is a disappointment.

The movie, like the TV series, is loosely based on the writings and drawings of James Thurber, famous writer-cartoonist. But the movie is as strange as some of Thurber's cartoons, without their charm.

"YOU CAN'T take it as pure entertainment, because it's not that entertaining. The humor is at times too obvious, at other times too morbid. I seem to have heard the line "You can find everything at a literary tea except tea and literacy" before, and I can't going blind and doesn't want anyone to know it. He meets Barbara Harris, the divorced mother of three, and for some inexplicable reason, they fall into bed, in love and into marriage.

HER EX-HUSBAND, Jason Roberts, comes home from the wars (he's a photographer) and creates some havoc before taking off again.

He gets killed in the war, Lemmon's blindness worsens and 12-year-old Linda's stuttering is cured by Lemmon's hit book "The Last Flower."

It's a cute segment. But cuteness and sophistication sure make strange bedfellows.

Mummy Is Back

DETROIT Five feet tall, wearing a dazzling gold-leaf mask with decorations and 100 yards of line wrappings, the 35-40 year-old lady was given her first beauty treatment since she was acquired by the institute in 1889.

The 2000-year-old mummy may now be seen in a specially-constructed and oversized display case with other mummy objects which describe the entire funerary spectrum of the Egyptians.

Museum hours, six days weekly, excepting Monday and holidays, are 9:30 a.m. - 5:30 p.m.
