

Low Income Family Help Is Aim Of Extension Program

"Helping women of middle income learn to help those of low income is one aim of the Michigan State University Cooperative Extension Service, for the 1968-69 year."

The Family Living education study groups in Wayne and Oakland counties will have a varied program that Mrs. June Sears, extension home economist, hopes can be passed on to inner-city women through those who make their homes in the suburbs.

Mrs. Sears, who has worked extensively with women's groups in both middle and low income areas, believes the plan will help them make the kind of contacts that lead to friendship and respect.

"IT'S HARD TO FIND leaders among the lower-income women," she said, "and those we do have often have to drop out of the program because of family difficulties or other problems."

"But there's so much that women out here could teach them about things that we take for granted—things as simple as setting the table regularly for a meal."

She said she hopes to use the "vast resource of people" in this area to help convey some elementary home economics knowledge to those who have little.

Mrs. Sears, in addition to helping teach the course in the Family Life program, plans to set up study groups in low-income areas and then bring in suburban visitors to operate on a woman-to-woman basis.

"SOME OF THE PROGRAMS are trying to sound a bit fancy, like the one on foreign foods," she said. "But our idea is to include plenty of nutritional information that can be passed on."

Mrs. Sears met last week with officers and members of the Wayne County extension council to put together a program booklet for use by some

Students And Forum Join To Work Out Action Program

Four Wayne State University graduate students in sociology have prepared a program of action for all segments of the Southeastern Michigan community aimed at producing understanding and easing tensions in the area's urban crisis.

Pursuing a class project, they divided the area into four geographical sectors for intensive study, then pooled their findings to produce a booklet titled "What You Can Do!"

The booklet is available for the asking.

The study was conducted in cooperation with the Southeastern Michigan Community Forum, with its "In Your Own Interest" television series broadcast five Monday evenings during May and June over local channels.

Everyone at management level should "use your position to influence hiring practices which restrict individuals from gaining adequate employment," they said.

RATHER THAN ignoring the situation, business leaders should support political leaders, editors, teachers, police and all others "who stand up for racial justice." They should also offer free management counsel or financial support to black community-owned business enterprises.

Individuals, through the organizations to which they belong should urge educational programs, influence the banking institutions with which they do business to provide mortgages or business loans for Negroes and privately ask clubs and the armoring of citizens.

The booklet also said individuals should challenge all negative racial comments in conversations; make telephone calls to discuss problems and exchange information; appraise local newspapers and write to editors if their approaches are negative; and organize neighbors into discussion groups.

WHITES "Who know little about black communities or culture should subscribe to Negro publications," it added, and should check local supermarkets and other stores on Negro hiring practices.

They also were urged to survey local teacher hiring practices and local policies on student discussions of race and student exchange.

Youth should assume community leadership in implementing youth action groups, get existing youth groups in which they are members to discuss urban crisis issues and encourage high school drama and music instructors to feature interracial drama, music festivals and study groups, the report said.

MORE THAN 15,000 discussion groups were organized to meet in homes, view the programs, then provide a feedback to reveal local attitudes on race and poverty and provide grass roots suggestions for their solution.

Repeated computer samplings taken throughout the entire series revealed at its end that the greatest concern over race and poverty is reflected, not by residents of the inner city, but among white, middle class, college graduate residents of the suburbs and the outlying sections of cities.

The four candidates for advanced degrees, Forest Craver, Susan Crocker, Joan Fields, and the Rev. Russell Long, compiled "Opportunities for Action" especially designed for leaders of business and industry, individual persons in their daily experiences, youth and youth groups and senior citizens.

Other convention highlights included dedication of a $245,000 office structure by the National Woman's Missionary Society, honoring of Dr. W. Dale Oldham, speaker since 1947 on the church's international radio program, Christian Brotherhood Hour, adoption of a record $2,256,100 budget, commissioning of 10 new missionaries for the home and foreign fields, and election of key national officers.

The assembly resolution urged state organizations "to bring about full and fair representation of Negro persons according to abilities in the offices and boards and committees of state organizations."

The executive council was instructed to place the declaration before local congregations and make public those which ratify the declaration. A progress report is to be brought to the 1969 convention.

The Rev. Arlo F. Newell, of St. Louis, was named chairman of the general assembly.

Integration of all local congregations and state assemblies has been called for by the policy-making General Assembly of the Church of God.

The action was a highlight of business deliberations during the church's recent 79th International Convention at Anderson, Ind. It supplements three major steps in the area of race relations of previous years.

THE FIRST NEGRO to hold a top post in the executive council, the church's legal arm and coordinating body for the general assembly, will be the Rev. Marcus Morgan of Chicago. He was elected vice-chairman.

The General Assembly resolution for total integration in church life came in a major statement that declared, "The urgency for action is growing in society and the need for the church to begin with its own fellowship to make corrections is imperative."

It was pointed out many congregations over the United States and Canada already are integrated with families of other races, but the newly adopted resolution calls for immediate employment of open-door policies.

Not only is action sought on the congregational level, but state assemblies are urged to merge where both white and black organizations exist. National offices of the church here are being asked to fill vacancies, whenever possible, with qualified Negro representatives.

OUR CHURCH AND OLD-TIME AMERICANISM

Today some churches and clergy are marching and demonstrating and letting our country to "Get Out of Viet Nam" and saving our country's war against Communism butchers is "imperialism." Therefore, we know to all who read this that the Galilean Baptist Church of Livonia supports and prays for our government in its fight against Communism — that it supports our soldiers in the front lines — that it does not believe in any legislation that "protects" the criminal and "handcuffs" the police from protecting decent citizens.

Furthermore, we believe and preach the Bible as the inerrant Word of God which teaches that man is a sinner who needs personally the transforming salvation of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that once a person receives this salvation he becomes a law-abiding citizen.

On Sunday, July 7, Galilean Baptist Church is having a special "Patriot's Day." We are going to display proudly our beloved flag. A special message, "Menace Facing America," will be given in the 11:00 a.m. service.

We extend a special invitation to Veterans, police, city officials, and all good citizens who believe in and love our country and want to see it remain free.
