it!" Whereupon he launched into a denunciation of the so-called Hollywood bed that was a fad in the '30s and '40s.

Myself, I can recall reading only one piece of information that ever stuck. It was in one of those short little paragraphs tucked at the end of a magazine article.

"For every woman in the household," it said, "a man needs to spend one evening away from home in order to maintain his sanity."

And so I find that the only fishing partner I can rely on is a fellow with a wife and five daughters. Unless he's away from home working, I can count on him to want to get away from home for a little constructive angling.

We've developed our own one-for-one fishing method: For every fish we catch, we consume one beer. But I digress.

A lady who wishes to remain totally anonymous, even by city of residence, because she could have all sorts of trouble, got no advice from anyone on anything, but she did overhear some advice her father gave a brother.

My brother's fiancee's grandmother had been married five times and had outlived four of her husbands. So my father advised my brother, "Never eat dinner at your wife's grandmother's place."
