New home construction linked to existing homes

Sales of existing homes must remain high if new home construction is to recover from its dismal 1975 pace, a leading economist says.
In fact, said Kenneth J. Thygeson, chief economist for the United States League of Savings Associations, "not only is a strong existing home market a prerequisite for a strong new housing market, it is essential in providing home ownership opportunities for a significant number of American families who simply cannot afford today's new home."

Savings and loan associations last year lent almost $28 billion to buy existing housing units—nearly four times the amount of money lent for new home construction.

new home construction. That $28 billion financed the purchase of more than 1.2 million existing housing units.
Overall, savings associations lent $54 billion during 1975, an all-time record. The savings and loan business' 1976 lending volume could top $70 billion, Thygeson said.

JUST HOW MUCH loan money will funnel to new home construction this year is dependent to a large degree on the pace of existing home sales, Thygeson said.

"In today's economy and with today's prevailing price structure for new homes," he explained, "eventually the only families who can afford a new home are those with an existing home to sell."

The majority of new home buyers are families who have owned a home cashed in on that home's appreciation and used their gain in equity as a down payment on a new, more expensive home," Thygeson said.

Data compiled by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board supports Thygeson's thesis. According to the board, the typical new home cost was $46,200 at the end of 1975, while the average sales price for an existing home was a comparatively low $37,500.

FOR MANY young families the lower-priced existing home represents the only opportunity to own a home at all.

A study published by the Department of Housing and Urban Development provides "conclusive evidence that we must maintain a viable existing home market if new housing units are to be sold," he said.

The HUD study, Thygeson said, indicates that more than half of all families who buy newly built single-family homes were previous homeowners. Only 4 per cent of the new home buyers were newly formed households.

"It stands to reason," he continued, "that for the majority of new home buyers the ability to purchase that home is predicated on their ability to sell their existing unit."

Israeli journalist slated to lecture

Amnon Rubinstein, noted Israeli journalist, author and lecturer, will deliver the first Jack Rosenbloom Memorial Lecture of Adat Shalom Synagogue at 8:15 p.m. on Wednesday evening, March 17, in the Synagogue sanctuary. He will speak on "Israel: Needs, Politics and Social Change."

Room for his candid and independent critique of official Israeli policy, Dr. Rubinstein is one of the leaders of Shalom, a movement for political and social change in Israel, born out of the Post Yom Kippur War trauma.

Dr. Rubinstein is the former dean of the Law School of Tel Aviv University and is a member of the editorial board of "Ha'aretz," Israel's leading independent daily newspaper. His feature articles have appeared frequently in the "Magazine" of the New York Times.

He is in the United States on a special three-week lecture tour. The Jack Rosenbloom Memorial Lecture of Adat Shalom Synagogue has been established by the late Mr. Rosenbloom's family and friends as an annual tribute of learning to his memory.

The entire community is invited to participate at no charge.
