Board starts bargaining for sale of school lands

By LYNN ORR

The possible lease or sale of Ten Mile Elementary School will be the topic of conversation among Farmington School District administrators and City of Farmington and Farmington Hills city managers in coming weeks.

The Farmington Board of Education approved a resolution to begin negotiations with the two city governments concerning the future of the school structure, which is being closed this month.

Farmington Hills and City of Farmington officials have eyed the structure as a possible site for the 47th District Court House. Architect John Allen placed a $365,000 price tag on converting the structure to a court building in a recent feasibility study presented to the two city councils.

A purchase offer by the Northwest Christian School was rejected by the board last week on the unanimous recommendation of the building and sites committee chaired by Trustee William Gravius.

"We considered the offer too low, and at this time, we are in discussions with other agencies and persons in regard to this property," Gravius told the board.

THE BOARD also directed the administration to meet with J. Ross, representing a Farmington Hills real estate development firm, concerning his purchase offer on school property in Section 1 of Farmington Hills.

The 20 acres in question, west of Franklin Hills Country Club and bordered by Northwestern Highway, Inkster, Middlebelt and Fourteen Mile, were originally purchased as a junior high school site but proved unsuitable for development, according to Business Mgr. William Prisk.

The Building and Sites Committee and administrative officials will be meeting with Ross concerning the possible sale of the property, purchased by the school district in 1968 for $200,000.
