Oriental Rugs
JUST ARRIVED... A UNIQUE PURCHASE
We are particularly proud of this special purchase of magnificent antique Russian Caucasian rugs. Fifteen very unique pieces. Included in this unusual buy are also many new Persian Kilims and selected hand-embroidered Sumaks in dramatically bold geometric designs. Brilliantly textured, these very special flat-weave Sumaks and reversible Kilims are beautiful examples of this rapidly disappearing art form. All are superbly hand-woven all wool.
On view at both stores in selected sizes.

Home of future may be luxury mudhut

Is there an igloo in your future? A Michigan architect says it's a possibility.

The energy crisis is going to change the way buildings look, inside and outside, Southfielder Robert Fearon, district engineering manager for Michigan Bell Telephone Co., said last week at Michigan State University. Fearon told a design seminar at MSU that an energy-conscious approach to building-taking advantage of all facets of the natural environment-will lead to "regionalization" in architecture.

"In a futuristic way," he said, "this may lead back to teepees, igloos, mud huts, caves and Mediterranean villages, all of which took advantage of natural ventilation, lighting, energy and the building materials at hand."

Fearon contends that the real energy crisis will arrive about 1985 and anticipates that it may begin to ameliorate about 2000, but he said that "when the real shortage becomes evident, sometime after 1985, any price to assure adequate energy to maintain our standard of living will seem a small price to pay."

He underscored the importance of alternative sources of energy, but dismissed a considerable share as infeasible.

The sun, he said, offers the greatest source of energy: the sea, second.

"THE TOTAL output of man-made, energy-producing systems in the world in 1976 was less than four-thousandths of one per cent of the energy received by the earth from the sun," he said.

Perhaps the greatest share of research funds for alternative energy should be directed toward the sun and sea, he proposed.

"Thoughtful and creative approaches to building design can maximize the use of natural energy resources which are basically free and inexhaustible," Fearon told the Michigan leaders, and he recited a litany of ways.

He urged architects to indoctrinate their clients on the essentiality of energy-conscious design, and patrons to allow architects greater flexibility in design.

He called for design and recycling of existing structures. "More than 93 per cent of the energy used in buildings during the next 50 years will be used in buildings which now exist," he said.

Architects and engineers must rethink their approaches to design, he added.

"Buildings do not require heating, cooling or lighting," he noted. "Why, then, do we design heating, cooling and lighting systems which operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week, for buildings which are occupied a third of that time?"

Fearon was none too optimistic about the energy future. He said, "Practicing energy conservation now in our daily lives and in the design of future buildings is laudable and necessary, but it will just postpone that time in the future when the real crisis will begin."

Larsen will get top slot

Kenneth Larsen has been promoted to general manager of manufacturing at the Parke, Davis and Company Pharmaceutical Division.

Larsen, of Southfield, is now responsible for Oral and Topical Products, Industrial Products Division, Biological and Parenteral Products, Parke-Davis' Holland, Mich., chemical facility, Fuller Laboratories, and the firm's laboratories in Puerto Rico.

Larsen joined Parke-Davis in 1949 as manager of the antibiotic control department in Detroit. During his 28-year career with the company, he has held a succession of management positions in manufacturing, quality control, controller, purchasing and inventory management divisions. He was named superintendent of the capsule division in 1966, and general manager of industrial products in 1973. A year later he was promoted to general manager, Oral-Topical Products, the position he held until this promotion.

Born in Oak Park, Ill., he holds a BS and MS from the University of Illinois. Larsen has resided in Southfield for several years and has been active in community activities. He also served for several years on the Southfield Board of Education.
