

Residents seek the normal life

gation, Grand River and Halstead, said his towing business more than doubled.

"There really hasn't been that many accidents. We've been mostly just towing drivers out of ditches."

Restaurants and bar owners had a mixed reaction from their patrons.

Mike Love, of Andy's Country Market, 2255 Middlebelt, said he and owner Jewell Harris are making a week of it at the store.

"We told our customers to call if they really needed something. We're here anyway. You don't really sleep good when you're away from home," said Love.

Maria Kerr, of Dunleavy's Pub and Grub, said that establishment closed Thursday due to a lack of electrical power but it was able to re-open Friday.

"The show must go on, so I went to work," she said. Unfortunately, the customers were few and far in between.

Novi accepts applications for craft fair

The Novi Parks and Recreation Commission is now accepting applications for booths at its winter arts and crafts fair on Saturday, March 4. The fair will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the new Novi High School cafeteria at the intersection of Ten Mile and Taft.

The booth fee is $10, payable to Novi Parks and Recreation Commission. Payment must accompany the application form which is due Feb. 15. For more information, call Steve Bosak at 349-1976.

Usually lunch trade at the pub garners about 100 customers. Friday's trade was limited to a little more than one dozen.

Vincent Milazzo, of the Big Boy restaurant at 2404 Orchard Lake Road, said his business was rather brisk, considering the weather.

"We felt we had to open even though a lot of other places weren't," he said. Even some stout-hearted residents made it to Friday morning mass, according to Father William Shriner, a priest at St. Fabian.

"I don't know how they got here, but three persons showed up for the 6 a.m. mass," he said.

But the persons who probably were the happiest over the record blizzard were students in the Farmington School District. Final exams were cancelled on Thursday and Friday, giving the academicians an extra weekend to bone up on their studies.

Firefighters had their work cut out for them as this four-wheel drive ran into some real problems after jumping a curb. Lending a hand in this small fire are (from left) Ray Lardie, John Maxwell and Tom Daniels. (Staff photo by Harry Mauthe)
