Newlyweds can make a good investment and still fill their new apartment by buying mix-and-match furniture.

Smart

Honey, do you have $2? I don't have enough for the license."

I nodded at my fiancé and handed the money to the clerk at the marriage license bureau, while a small voice in the back of my mind reminded me how quickly our savings accounts had depleted during the past few weeks.

Allen and I were both working, and when we totalled our two savings accounts, it had seemed like a small fortune. But we hadn't reckoned with the high cost of getting married. Now, with the wedding only a week away we felt like paupers.

Some of the money had been spent on renting a small, three-room apartment within walking distance of downtown Windsor.

The river was only a block away, and I think it was the sound of boats saluting each

Give each other

A rainbow of velour towels, a linen closet filled with perfectly matched sheets and pillow cases, a set of glasses with no printing on them, serving dishes, pots and pans—all the stuff necessary to setting up a household, given to you and your mate by friends and family.

But somewhere in all that wedding paper and white ribbon there should be a gift from you to your spouse. Nothing ostentatious or extravagant, rather a permanent keepsake of your wedding day and your commitment to each other.

Although many couples will forsake the gift exchange, the romantics in the crowd may decide to give their spouse a gift that lasts long after the honeymoon photos have faded.

The gift should be personal and pre-planned. A last minute purchase inevitably shows itself as such.

A husband might consider giving a piece of jewelry. The wife could give her mate a family heirloom.

Other gifts, from wife to husband, include:

- A money clip engraved with wedding date and initials. He
