The Green Thumb

By GEORGE ABRAHAM

Tips on lilac culture: It's strange when a lilac falls to flower. Yet, this happened frequently this spring. When a lilac fails to flower, usually it's due to too much shade, too many young suckers, or severe drought in the late summer after the buds have formed. Sometimes heavy pruning (shearing of the tops) will cause non-flowering.

If your lilac bush is full of old wood, or tall growth, you can do some pruning now. Cut out about one third of the oldest wood, plus any that's diseased or rotted. In some cases where a lilac bush is overgrown, full of tangled wood, your best bet is to get brutal and prune out the old, heavy growth. Leave some of the young suckers to take over.

Usually, after a bush has been pruned heavily, you will find new growth coming up, and within two or three years you'll have a productive bush. Where you have an unpruned lilac bush, your best bet is to cut them down nearly to the ground, and start over again.

Incidentally, it's not necessary to cut off the dead flowers of your lilac. Thousands of home owners who grow lilacs never bother to cut the old blooms and they get plenty of blossoms year after year.

HOW TO SLIP A ROSE: Technically, it's against the law to propagate a rose that's patented, but many home gardeners still start their own. It's a fairly simple job to do. Take a cutting about four inches long, strip off the lower leaves and insert the cutting into moist ground. Then place a fruit jar over the cutting and you'll find it roots within a few weeks. Make sure no blooms are left on the rose cutting. Leave the jar on all summer. If you root the cutting in late fall, you can leave the jar on all winter.

RABBIT INJURY: If you find your tomato, pepper or flowering plants cut off near the ground, it can be the work of cutworms or rabbits. You can tell rabbit injury by the sharp slant made on the stem about two inches above the ground. Cutworms cut the stems off flush with the ground. A light dusting of clorane will banish cut worms, or you can resort to paper collars.

Preparations
End Failures
In Painting

Put a stop to paint failures by preparing properly before you begin to paint.

It's always a good idea to check the caulking around windows and doors and re-caulk if necessary. Never paint over a soiled surface - hose down, dust and clean the area you plan to paint.

Use a detergent to clean up greasy spots. Places that are peeling or cracking should be sanded down to the bare wood and a primer should be applied.

England or Michaelmas daisies) naturally grow tall and there isn't too much you can do to keep them short. Try pinching them about one to two inches from the top. They won't stay short and bushy.
