"I haven't seen s' newspaper for negs, and I don't kniw what is going on at Jonesville or anywhere else," she confided.

"What then?"
Jose significantly patted the gift revolver at his hip. "This little fellow will have something to say."
Dave looked him over idly, from head to heet, then murnured: "You would do well to go slow, compactal, then the word flurrels."
"We were like brothers, and I do not know of any quarrels. But I shall find out. I am not given to housing, senor, but I am a devilish bue man in my way."

"The limit!" Mrs. Austin frowned at this light-seeming answer. "I suppose you mean that you would make any sacriface?" "Yes; that's it."
"Would you give up the woman herself, if you considered a year.

"No.] There couldn't be any duty higher than love—to my way of think-ing. But you shouldn't take me as a specimen. I'm not a good representative of my ser."

"I think you are a very good one," Alaire said quiety, and Jove realized that no flattery was intended.

Despite the rough reads, they made fair time, and the miles of cactus and scrawys brash rolled swiftly past. The morning sin swung higher, and by midday the metal of the automobile had become as hot as a frying pan. They stoped at variots goat ranches to inquire about Adolfo Urbina, and at noon halted beside a watercourse for lunch.
