Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white peau de soie with a chantilly lace bodice. Her bouquet was yellow roses.

The maid of honor was Bette Loesch, sister of the bride. She wore a floor length gown of yellow chiffon with a bodice of white baby lace.

Other attendants included A. Terri Crain, sister of the bridegroom; Alice Loesch, sister-in-law of the bride; Margaret Machado of Bristol, N.J.; and Linda Perdue of Alma. They wore gowns of green chiffon with white lace bodices. They carried nosegays of yellow roses and white mums.

Seamless poured floors are becoming increasingly popular. This material comes as a liquid which is applied to the floor in several coats. The application of plastic chips before the last coat creates various patterns. Underlayment is generally required, but if the old floor is sound and smooth, you can usually do without it. Application is no more difficult than painting a floor with a roller. Work out a good schedule so successive steps are carried out on time without disrupting the household. The floor can be covered up the wall to eliminate baseboards, so cleaning is much easier.
