CHAPTER VIII.

Korak and Meriem.
For many months the stronge life of the three went on unantared by any unusual occurrences—at least without any occurrences—at least without any occurrences that seemed unusualf to the youth or the lape—but to the Hitel girl it was a constant lightmare of horrors for days and weeks until she, too, became accustomed to graing into the eyeless sockets of death and to the feel of the ley wind of his shroudlike mantle.

Showly she learned the radiments of Slowly she learned the radiments of the only common medium of thought the jonly common medium of thought exchange which her companions possessed—the infigurage of the great apea. More quickly she perfected herself in jungle craft, so that the time soon came when she was at misportant factor in the change, watching while the time to the same the same than the trace their same of the property of the pro others slept or helping them to trace the spoor of whatever prey they might be stulking.

Akut accepted her on a footing which bordered upon equality when it was a pressure for them to come into close contact, but for the study of the presence he had it from her. Finding that the night damp and chilf caused her disconfort and even suffering, Korak constructed a tight little shelter high among the swaying branches of a giant tree. Here little Meriem slept in comparative warmth and safety, while the Killier and the lappe perched upon nearby branches, the forture always before the darrance to the lotty doublet, when the study of the shelter is the construction of the shelter.

After the construction of the shelter the activities of the three became lo-calized: They ranged less widely, for there was always the necessity of re-turning to their own tree at nightfall. A river flowed near by. Game and fruit were plentiful, as were fish also. Existence had settled down to the daily hundrum of the wild—the search for food and the steeping upon till belies. They looked no further ahead than today.

Existence had settled down to the daily hundrum of the wild—the search for food and the steeping upon full bellies. They looked no further ahead than today.

If the youth thought of his past and of those who longed for him in the steeping had been seen to the search and the search and the present sort of way, as though that uppersonal sort of way, as though that other life belonged to another creature than himself. He had given up hope of returning to civilization, for, since his various rebuffs at the hands of those to whom he had looked for friendship, he had wandered so far inland as to realize that he was completely lost in the mares of the jungle.

Then, too, since the coming of Meriem he had found in her that one thing which he had most missed before in his savage jungle life—human companionally.

thing which he had most missed before in his awaye jungle life—human companionabily.

The little tril tdolled him, as she might have idollared an indulgent brother had abe had one. Love was a thing inknown to either. But as the youth, heard manibod it was ineritable that it should come to him, as it did to every other savage jungle male.

As Meriem becime proficient in their companionabily grew correspondingly, for now they could converse, and, dided by the mental powers of their human heritage, they amplified the restricted vocabulary of the apes until inkling was transformed from a task into an egiogable pastime. When Kornk hunted Berlem usually accompanied him, for she had learned the fine art of silence when silence was desirable. She could pass through the branches of, the great trees now with all the fagility and stealth of the Killer himself. Great heights no longer appailed her. She swung from limb to lind, or she raced through the mighty branches, sure footed, lithe and fearless. Korak was very pround of her, and even bid Akut grunted in approval where before he had growied in contempt.

A distant village of blacks had fur-

Even their superstitious fear of this weird creature who hunted with a huge bill my was overcome in their desire by weak vengeance upon him and the themselves for good and all of the merice of his presence in the junge.

And so it was that a score of the frietest and most floughty warriors of the tribe set out in pursuit of Koral and Akut but a few minutes, after they had left the scene of the Killer's many depredations.

The little party of warriors was led by Korudoo, the chief, a middle agas savage of exceptional cannot grant and harvers. It was he who taw the savage of exceptional cannot grant and harvers. It was he who taw control and all and the savage of exceptional cannot grant and followed; for hours by the mysterions inetheds of their almost unclant powers of deservation, incutton and even scent.

The white youth and the white maid stood alone in the jungle when they were discovered by Kovudoo's band Akut had been made king; of his aperties, and kforak; to Akut's sorrow had left him to dwell with Meriem in the jungle. One of Kovudoo's melenned close to the ear of his chief.

In a lost corner of the great lowland flat of Flauders, defended from the sea by an artificial dike, and at the point of intersection of a net work of

They call it "Bruges la morte" and at every turn there is something to remind the visitor of the decay that has fallen upon the towo. The ever-recurring view of picture-quely grouped tower, gable and hridge, of wide tree-filled parks, breathes an atmosphere of infinite stillness and charm, which is at the same time strangely pathetic.
