SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN

EX-Governor Warner put a lot of hardheaded, common-sense patriotism into his formal reply to a question about his attitude toward the senatorial campaign. Repeating an earlier statement of his that organized candidates should not commence too early this year, he supplemented it with intimation that campaigning being done already by others cannot help but interfere with the work for our boys at the front and declared that he does not want to be "a party to pulling any man from even an hour's time for necessary war work, especially the third Liberty Loan campaign and the coming Red Cross drive for another hundred million dollars."

Mr. Warner, it is only fair to him to say, is giving no proof that he is sincere in taking this position and that he is not merely putting out words for political effect. He has been devoting himself in wholesome fashion to various war efforts in his home district and has steadfastly refused to be diverted from them by political ambitions.

This is not the year for spending time, energy and money in pushing personal aspirations for office. The war is the paramount issue for the state and the nation at present, and the slogan that should be applied in selecting the next senator from Michigan is the question as to who will be best fitted for aiding in the war by being in the senate. A prolonged and bitter campaign for the office must distract people's thoughts from the crucial task of the time, and just as far as it leaves application to the war effort it will weaken the state's participation in that effort and thereby lower the nation's efficiency in vital undertaking. Any campaign, too, especially a primary campaign with its inevitable personalities and its lavish expenditures, will be a trade method for choosing the best man for senator in this crisis; its result will be to select the candidate most adapted for stumping and manipulating political machinery rather than the one best qualified for helping to win the war.

Reasoning which a few days ago seemed to be hopelessly committed to a bitter and probably futile senatorial campaign, has set an example of better methods; voluntary retirement by one candidate has simplified its apparently unsolvable problem and has brightened the chance that the state may elect a truly patriotic senator. Over numerous senatorial candidates and prospective candidates might consider the course taken in the Badger state with profit to their own commonwealth and the nation.—Monday's Detroit Free Press.

The Coming of The Coins

The coins are coming, Uncle Sam! From every state you hold in hand. A throng of them, a logging jam, A avalanche of gold, silver and brass. From God-knows-where they waltz up in Nome To what's his name in Alacon. Their coming will be a cracking home To Washington the bacon.

The jangler, bless his nightly soul, No more in Garfield's booster. For the old sock and the sugar-bowl Hand dangle that they meet. And everywhere that space permits America's success signs Remind us all to get our bits— Three cheers for W. S. S. signs!

So, like the food that springs sends down From winter's snow-packed summits, The soft coins pour from every town— All the too deep or plummet. And when the war-locks count the cost, Each more or less in guesswork. They'll find we've saved more than we had. Thanks to our W. S. S. work! LISTER R. ALWOOD.

Say, Editor, that little advertisement did such quick work for me I am going to try another.—Carl Hatton.

GOLDEN WEDDING

On March 7th the Risner-Root home was the scene of a pretty, but simple golden wedding anniversary. Half a century ago Braton Flint, Esq., "tied the knot" that made William Risner and Sarah Leavenworth bride and groom, and started them on the voyage of the sea of matrimony. Besides the usual winds and waves, for many years a dark cloud with silvery lining overshadowed them, in the death of their children, Camilla, Effie and Mark. On this account and their poor health, only a very few of the near relatives and old friends were invited. The table decorations were yellow tulips and daffodils, with a chicken dinner. Loren B. Flint, like his Uncle Braton, Justice of the Peace, made some very appropriate remarks in honor of the occasion, and also favored us with some beautiful solos. Mrs. Sarah Sanford, a former school teacher of the bride of fifty years ago, read a fine paper, written by Mrs. Esther Grover. The only out of town guest was J. W. Devereaux, of Rushton, where Mr. Risner was pastor of a church for five years. All report an enjoyable time, even while being "shot by wisdom" the photograph.
