We've just finished participating in our first television survey.

For a whole week we've tried, with as much accuracy as our wild hair could muster, to record each and every show illuminating our screen and each and every pair of eyes and ears giving it heed. No easy chore, I have to report.

I HAD A FEW reservations when a persistent telephone caller asked that I take this step. But my concerns were overcome when I began to savor the idea that there was someone out there actually interested in my opinion of what was worth watching on the tube.

After years of wondering from whence came all the ratings you read about, this was something new.

MARGARET MILLER

Anyway, I agreed and in due course the survey booklet arrived.

AS SOON AS I started studying its directions and blank spaces to fill in, I realized I was in trouble.

First, list the channels available on the set. That wasn't too hard, but what did they mean by call letters?

Then I was asked to list the ages of all viewers in the household. Should I be honest, or should I pretend I was a day earlier and my birthday had not passed?

Then there was the question of our more-or-less-away-at-school-but-now-graduated-and-often-on-the-premises daughter. Should she be family member or visitor?

As things worked out, she blew it while a situation comedy was in progress the first morning of the survey. Her sister duly recorded her.

"You're listing me watching that dumb show," she asked.

"You know you laughed," the other one retorted.

THE GIRLS WERE pretty good about remembering and recording. I was terrible when it came to keeping my mind on it and not too confident about where to draw the lines. The man of our house didn't much want to get involved. It was left to the girls to pick up the pieces and keep the record straight.

Then came the question about what to do when someone—like me—falls asleep during a program. That contingency turned out to be covered. "Set turned on but no one watching" was one of the ratings. There were complaints that it wasn't a very typical week, what with a political convention and the Olympics. Our high schooler recorded only once her favorite program, "Mary Hartman, Miss Marks."

The rest of the time it was on too late.

I don't know how much our records advanced the cause of television preference knowledge. But it gave us a purpose in life for a week.
