

HAPPY DAYS

Faces reflect our festival's success

Monday, August 2, 1976 OBSERVER & ECCENTRIC (F)1A

(ABOVE) Leon Dochot, a Farmington Elk, took a break from peeling corn to enjoy a roast beef sandwich; his organization provided festival-goers under the big top at the Downtown Center. (RIGHT) While sidewalk sales were everywhere, young businesspersons lined the streets to get in the action, even if their friends lent a hand; they were out making money in front of Jerry's Bookstore on Farmington Road. (BELOW) Farmington Hills Police Chief Ron Holko demonstrated the power of a Stoner automatic machine gun during his department's firearms display at its local practice range.
