There is, however, one small consolation—the hole does look shorter than 301 yards in fact, it looks so short that I'm not sure I'm on the right hole, but one of the course maintenance men assures me that I am at number four.

HAPPY TO BE in the right place and ever aware of the water in the opening in-stallment of the series. I suck every golf half I owned in the water at Oakland fullished painfully remembering that my last two scores have been Its. I prepare to send a mighty drive bistering down the middle of the fairway.

Limbering up. I teed up the ball above the grass still wet with morning dew and sent a hist ground ball hopping down the fairway. It slithered maybe 100 yards. On a dry day I probably would have gatter a better roll.

Left with 201 yards to negotiate to the green. I hesitated over club selection. The distance dictated a long iron, possibly a fairway wood, but lately my attempts with those clubs have been miserable.

I turned instead, to my trusty five_ron, which I can always hit well—and hit the ball I did. The arch on the shot looked pretty as it sailed toward the green, but then turned into an ugly banana and curved left into the one opening in the trees.

Had the shot been straight I would have been on the green. Instead, I was about 10 sards to the left of the green and fortu-nately not symmed by a tire. I was five feet short of being hole-high.

Although I was not directly behind a tree trunk, there were quite a few branches hanging over the path which the ball must travel to reach the green.

. I DECIDED on a seveniron which I would use to put the ball upon a small hill on the near-side of the green where it would roll toward the pin Unfortunately I was too amous to watch this shid-which I would unfoldubedly chip in for a bride three—and lifted my head when I swang

I would undoubtedly chap in for a bride interes—and little fine head he in I swang. The hall landed hole high on the fringe four force from the green Ownstally. I use a five-interest from the green of the first of the first four force from this poston and hit the soa I would apply the soa I would apply the first force the hall guidely on this stoping green, and the soa I handle to first from the part of the first four the first four first first four first four first first four first first first first four first first
