HEW asks public how to administer new law

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) is going to the public for suggestions on how to administer a law affecting the rights of the handicapped.

The Federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which has been passed for three and a half years, is now being implemented. But HEW has been having problems in getting the country to understand the law, and is now asking the public for suggestions on how to administer the law.

HEW's Office of Public Affairs is holding a series of public hearings and is now in the process of holding a series of 22 public hearings.

We will be in the process of holding a series of public hearings in a lot of places for the act by Sept. 15, and these hearings will help us come to terms with the law.

One of the first hearings is in Detroit. The hearing was scheduled for Sept. 15 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. at the Motor City Marriott Hotel, 1000 Woodward Ave.

He adds that he was very disappointed by the response to the law, and that he was very disappointed by the response to the law.
