Libertarians break ground for the future

By JACKIE KLEIN

Libertarians are sprouting on the Oakland County political landscape and they plan to mushroom in numbers and clout in the next four years.

Members of the Libertarian Party, formed in 1972 to espouse individualism and other activities about which we have the right to make our own moral decisions. Politicians impose their morality on others who depend on legislators and tax dollars to carry on the charade.

Candidates advocate less government intervention when they claim, sparsely documented, that voters taxpayer dollars are misused in government affairs about welfare and education and pay off voters' services.

Three members of the Louis H. Barbore household in Farmington are the family team on the Oakland County Libertarian slate. Barbore is on the ticket for the top county executive slot, his wife, Therese, is on the 18th District U.S. Representative race and their son Thomas is seeking the office of 6th District State House Representative.

Barbore, 50, of Syndicated All Features, Inc., received advanced training from Dr. Napoleon Hill, author of "Think and Grow Rich." He was co-founder of a personal achievement institute.

As advocates of individual liberty, we believe every individual has the unalienable right to his own life, liberty and property, as long as he does not violate the rights of others," Barbore said. "Libertarians are free to do their own thinking and come to different conclusions after information and make choices.

Libertarians subscribe to the precepts of Nathaniel Branden, author of "Psychology of Self-Esteem: A New Road - A New View of Self-Esteem," and Milton Friedman, an Nobel prize winner.

Basic beliefs are that taxes and government are not inevitable and that the assurance individual convictions, mental efforts and individual preferences, Barbore said.

"LIBERTARIANS GENERALLY don't advocate laws governing victimless crimes," Barbore said. "We support legalization of drugs, gambling, prostitution capable of working. If taxes were lower there'd be more incentive for industry. It's time workers' compensation and unemployment compensation didn't price business out of the market."

Barbore believes the present system of government is a travesty and the public is deceived. He maintains there's no distinction between ethics and politics and he believes in democracy but not in the Democratic party.

Libertarians see their motto as "The least government is best government." They don't believe in a big government that's big on taxes and big on spending.
