

Probation officer Philip Bobers shares the trailer with the Farmington Hills clerk's files, even though it doesn't have water. "It's not too bad," he said of the trailer's size.

Janet Wayne, (left) a co-op student from North Farmington High School, continues typing forms as Judge Margaret Schaefer and clerk Brenda Steusloff discuss a particularly troublesome file.

Marjyn Dewar, of the Farmington office of 47th District Court, looks over the morning's mail. Mrs. Dewar started as a part-time typist for the court seven years ago.

Attorney John Donohue (left) waits with P.U. John Kohls for the court session to begin in Farmington Hills.

The clerks will have a third office when the Farmington Hills Parks and Recreation building, behind the municipal center is completed. Presently, the clerks are keeping their files in a trailer behind City Hall.

Six court clerks help keep wheels of justice rolling

By LOUISE OKRUTSKY

AN UNUSUAL group of six women, Farmington Hills' 47th District Court clerks, are about to begin their day. Although the paper work and the court sessions are the same, the court morning is busy.

The clerks are part of a team of six women who work in the court's office. They are: Judge James Michael Hard and Maryann Steusloff, the court's clerk; Janet Wayne, a co-op student from North Farmington High School; Brenda Steusloff, a clerk; Marjyn Dewar, a part-time typist; and Maryann Steusloff, a clerk.
