Toys can be eye-lighters

A kid in a toy shop conjures up visions of row upon row of toys, stretching as far as the eye can see. Problems come in making a select in, however. What would your child choose? If he could have just one thing?

"To find out, imagine yourself as a child. Remember?"

Think of the bright colors and unusual shapes that dazzled you then. Remember the spinning tops which whined a mare of color when attached by a cord to a finger.

The toy market may be more sophisticated now, but kids still have the same interest. When coupled with an active imagination, can make Christmas shopping a nostalgic return to days filled with excitement and anticipation.

Kidults are not to be forgotten; attitude that needs to be matched with suitable gifts, providing an energy booster. Tricycles, bicyclettes and a variety of vehicles which use pedal power are now on the market to fill this need.

But for those quiet moments, toy shops hold endless possibilities. Building sets that snap together are traditional favorites for both boys and girls. Don't forget tool sets, some of which are complete with hammer, saw, drill, ruler and level.

Be sure to check the garage for wood scraps and unused building supplies that will take form under a young artist's hand.

There are many other gifts besides the usual dolls and stuffed animals, including cooking and house cleaning equipment, drive-in characters, craft kits, plant sets, books, records and other.

Although candy making is not as popular as it once was, other craft kits in the line are made of plastic and are very popular.

Fast sets can help make a child's part of the Christmas. They include a whole lot of sets up to be made, including a set of the new, doesn't wear biology, plastic and on the market.

Books about Indian, Native and British, as well as other stamps and historical pictures can be found in the literature section, which includes a set of the new.

Other possibilities include tickets to the theatre of the United Institute of Arts, or to the Young People's Concerts at Ford Auditorium.

For stocking stuffers, consider novelty belts, tube socks, mittens and carved, bubbles, sugarless gum, nuts and unusual fruits such as pomgranates.

Whether a child or a kid at heart, Christmas morning can bring delight and appreciation with a little imagination.
