Schembechler tells students

Motivation is key to success

By JOHN BOZZO

University of Michigan football coach Glenn "Bo" Schembechler told students at Andover High School that being highly motivated, setting goals and working hard to achieve them is his philosophy of success.

He was speaking as part of the Bloomfield Hills School District's Lyceum program. Under the program, distinguished people tell students what inspirations and motivations helped shape their lives.

Schembechler began his swing to both of the Bloomfield Hills senior high schools by receiving some kidding about Michigan's Rose Bowl loss.

"This is my first public appearance in Detroit since the Rose Bowl, for obvious reasons," Schembechler said. A few seconds later he stopped talking as everyone in the packed gymnasium turned their attention to a student waving a University of Southern California pennant.

"How'd he get in here?" quipped Schembechler.

"AS A COACH," he continued, "year in and year out I deal with a lot of young people coming to the university. About 90 per cent come to school and never have an idea of what they want to be or do. They take classes and find an interest."

"The other 10 per cent know exactly what they want to be. Of those, half will change their mind after two years in college."

Schembechler said that he considers professional football "the worst" occupation. Even those who make it big will have nothing when they retire if they don't plan for the future, he said.

"The greatest single factor is to be highly successful," Schembechler said. "Any guy who is successful in football can be successful in anything."

Whether you get fired up in chemistry class, excited about what you're learning, being highly motivated is the key to being successful."

As an example, Schembechler told the students about his favorite player. The player was a walk-on who worked his way onto the starting team his senior year at Michigan, after three years of participation on the team.

When that player, Don Warner of Detroit Divine Child, was a freshman he was 5' 17 1/2 and wanted to play guard. Michigan's guards averaged 6-3. 240 at that time.

Although Schembechler tried to talk Warner out of playing because he might get hurt, and even though he didn't believe he could play in the Big Ten, Warner had a "fantastic" senior year in 1973.

Warner's season included a great performance in Michigan's 1974 tie with Ohio State. He was hurt in the game and operated on the next day. Now he works for the Eastman Kodak Co.

The important thing, Schembechler said, getting to the moral of the story, "is that nobody talked him out of what he wanted to do."

SCHEMBECHLER ADDED that it is important to set specific goals. "The first thing our football team does when they come back in the fall is to set down goals for the season," Schembechler said. "I believe you have to have a goal, set it down and believe in it."

"You must be willing to work, have great self discipline, be the kind of guy who is unselfish and the kind of guy who wants to be the best."

Following the prepared remarks at each school, Schembechler answered questions from the audience. "Don't ask me anything about bowl games or whether I'll pass more next year," he said. Following are question topics and Schembechler's paraphrased answers.

•Recruiting: College recruiting is now run the proper way, except for the few who violate rules. The day the University of Michigan cannot compete by offering only a grant-in-aid is the day I quit coaching.

•Football revenue: Money made on football supports all other sports and building maintenance. This is unfortunate because it creates a lot of pressure on the football coach.

•Pro coaching: I have been approached about pro football coaching but am not interested at this time. I'm 47 years old and have coached 25 years in college. I'll close my career out at Michigan unless something happens like they don't want me there anymore or I get a better offer.

•Heart Attack: Open heart surgery is not as scary as people make it out to be. I take no medication and am confident everything is all right.
