Spiders and orange bode good fortune for

No matter how contemporary the bride and groom, they usually make some bows to folk beliefs transmitted from one generation of newlyweds to another.

Not all are followed explicitly and some, wisely, are wholly ignored, but many of today's wedding practices bear the stamp of times past.

Time, remember, stands on the side of the bride and groom, and to ignore custom, which has fulfilled the wedding promises of many, might be precarious.

There are just a few clues to selecting a likely mate.

A fair, young maiden can usually detect a prospect when a mockingbird flies over her house or when a white dove comes near her home.

An alternative is when a spider spins a thread down from the ceiling, a young girl can dance the spider up and down on the thread, with the intention of catching a groom.

Many men and women might say that any time is a good time to marry when a good spouse is willing.

But the belief that June is the best time goes back to the Romans who honored Juno, goddess of marriage and wife of Jupiter, in this month. They thought that prosperity came to the man and happiness to the woman married in June.

Dec. 31 is a popular wedding day in Scotland, for the Scots believe the whole world celebrates with the couple married New Years Eve and that by the following morning, the couple will have been married for a year. It's always a double celebration!

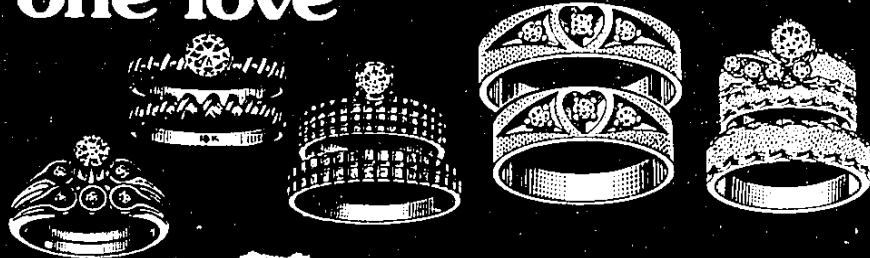

Moonlight is good for spooning, true, but the most moonlight, a full moon, is the best time to marry.

Marrying during a waning moon is a sure indication of a misfortunate life.

Superstitious couples should time their wedding ceremony between the
