Eye bank sets sights on more eyes, cash

Last year was a memorable one for about 250 Michigan citizens, not because of the bicentennial, but because the r sight was restored.

These formerly blind or visually-handicapped men, women and children received corneal transplants, made possible by the Michigan Eye-Bank, which supplies, free of charge, the eye tissue used in such sight-restorative surgery.

In recognition of this service, observance of "Michigan Eye-Bank Week" has been set for March 6-12.

The eye-bank is a joint project of the Lions Clubs of Michigan and the medical centers of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University, with the assistance of other organizations and individuals.

"But the compassionate people who request that their eyes be used, after death, to help restore sight to others are the ones who merit special recognition," Lawrence D. Wyman of Clare, president of the Michigan Eye-Bank, said. "Without those generous acts, the eye-bank could not exist."

"It is our goal to obtain pledges of eyes and supporting funds to help everyone who can be helped to see again," Wyman added.

More information may be obtained from your local Lions Club or from the eye-bank divisions at the University of Michigan and Wayne State University.
