

New Z-28

The Camaro Z-28 returns to the Chevrolet lineup after a two-year absence. The car was reintroduced because of an upswing in the specialty vehicle market and increased demand for performance-type vehicles. For a retail price of $5,171, the Z-28 offers a suspension system designed for 70x15 radial tires and 15x7 wheels, dual exhaust outlets and a 350-cubic-inch 4-barrel carburetor V-8 engine.

Winter '77: Expensive

By BRENT RUSSELL

Motorists will pay many economic penalties because of the unusually cold weather this winter.

An obvious example is the effects of the extra salt now being poured onto streets and highways. The salt will cause the undersides of automobiles to rust, but that rust may not show up for months.

Salting roadways, according to the Environmental Protection Agency, costs motorists $2 billion in a normal year.

But that's hardly the only extra cost. Worn batteries choose cold weather mornings to give up. Tires forced to travel on icy streets and on salt or chemically treated streets are weakened and may expire prematurely. All other rubber parts, such as hoses and gaskets, are strained because of the temperature extremes.

The District of Columbia highway department estimates that each inch of snow that sticks costs $50,000 for plowing and salting. That is money that cannot be used for street building and repairs.

Because of these and other hidden problems, motorists will no doubt remember the winter of 1977 as an expensive one.
