Last summer's planning kept Michigan homes
warm this winter.

We weren't expecting this winter to be as cold as it's been. But we were ready just in case. And being ready is why Michigan didn't suffer the natural gas set-backs that hit many other states.

We planned for what would happen in extremely cold weather by storing gas in warm weather. In summer months when demand is less, we store gas in huge, underground storage fields. Then by tapping this gas in cold months, we can serve a peak load about three times as high as could be served by incoming pipelines alone. Michigan has more usable gas storage capacity than any other state in the continental United States.

We ask your help too. Turning your thermostat back to 65° during the day and even lower at night, and being sure your home has storm windows and adequate insulation, will conserve this precious energy.

Planning has helped see us through this winter. And I'm proud I work for the company that did it.
